Du Barry,
The Doll of the World.

Words by
GEO. TAGGART.
Author of "The Moth and the Flame."

Music by
J. FRED HELF.
Composer of "In the House of Too Much Trouble."

Intro.

Moderato.

1. Long years ago a king of France cast a jealous eye Upon a pretty milliner so

2. So dazzled by the wealth and gems, the young girl left her home, And in the royal palace found a fair; : : : He tried to win her heart, but she had said that she would wed A place; : : : Her lover could not win her back, she seemed to pay no heed To

The Publishers reserve the right to the use of this Music or Melody for any Mechanical Instrument.
Du Barry, the Doll of the World.

handsome youth for whom she'd truly care. Then to the little shop where she had what she must have known was her disgrace. The years then passed, the king was dead and worked both day and night, The king sent tempting messengers to her; They rebelled the land, Each friend the king had known had surely died; And lured her from her lover, from the only home she knew, The promises they whispered to her were: as they dragged the young girl forth, and led her off to death, The cruel mob with sneers and hisses cried;

Du Barry, the Doll of the World 3-9.
Du Barry, the Doll of the World.

CHORUS.  Slow voice.

"Du Bar-ry, the doll of the world, you'll be, The pet of the royal court, And the life you'll enjoy, With a crown for a toy, Many millions in vain have sought. Where ever there's love for the King of France, Wherever his flag's unfurled, There your name will be known As the pride of a throne, 'Du Bar-ry, the doll of the world!' "Du world,'"